- Working with benefits managers to develop evidence-based benefit designs
- Measuring the success of occupational health program interventions

About the group

The Corporate Health Directors Network serves corporate leaders with primary responsibility for occupational health program management, drawing members from the most innovative multinational Fortune 500 companies. Members attend meetings twice a year, in February and August, and stay in contact year-round via website postings, teleconferences and e-mails.

The Corporate Health Directors Network provides outstanding networking opportunities in a confidential environment. The professional relationships forged at member meetings provide the basis for ongoing support and benchmarking opportunities – assisting members in identifying best practices in all aspects of corporate occupational health programs.

Unparalleled benchmarking opportunities

The Corporate Health Directors Network meetings provide unparalleled opportunities for benchmarking with peers in a multi-industry setting. During the year, members may request surveys on current topics that require rapid turnaround. Survey participants may include members in the Corporate Health Directors Networks or members of other EHS Networks as well. All information is collected and handled with sensitivity to the need for confidentiality.

In addition, Mercer/ORC Networks conduct regular surveys on topics such as:

- Emerging occupational health issues such as pandemic preparedness
- Annual member company global safety and health performance
- Occupational safety and health program management in global companies
- Safety and Health Perception Surveys
- Safety and Health Organizational Structure
